QUESTIONS FOR FURTHER REFLECTION:

1. Matt talked Sunday about how we respond when someone wrongs us. Can you think of a time when you were wronged by someone?
2. When someone wrongs us, it is very easy to become angry and bitter towards that person. What are some ways that we can remain tender-hearted toward them in hopes that the situation can be reconciled?
3. In conflict, our natural tendency is to either retreat from confrontation or attack the person. Which are you more inclined to? Can you give an example?
4. If Christ's forgiveness should compel us to forgive others, why do you think it is so difficult to forgive when we have been wronged?
5. Do you have any "burned bridges" in your life that resulted from you either retreating from or attacking a person who wronged you? How should you have responded? Is there a step you can take now to pursue reconciliation?
