Summary

Nestled in the heart of Central America, just south of Mexico, is the country of Guatemala. Its varied landscapes and climates as well as the many Mayan ruins scattered throughout the country attract visitors every year. Tourists and collectors alike seek after the beautiful Guatemalan handicrafts such as clothing, pottery, and woodworking. Over half of the population of Guatemala is descended from the Mayan civilization and they speak 22 Mayan-based indigenous languages. Spain's conquest of Guatemala in 1532 introduced the Spanish language and culture, which is reflected in Guatemala's culture today.

Guatemala's beautiful countryside belies a troubled political past. In 1996, the government signed a peace treaty ending a civil war that had been raging for 36 years. The end of the war signaled progress for the nation, but the effects of the war are still felt. Gang and organized crime violence and drug trafficking test the government and police control. Economically, more than half the population is living in poverty and over 40 percent of the children under the age of five are malnourished. Guatemala's profitable production of coffee, sugar, and bananas for export has contributed to less production of grains, which have to be imported for food.

Catholicism, introduced by the Spanish and syncretized with Mayan religions, controls most religious life in Guatemala. Early in the twentieth century, Protestant churches started to make an impact, and the evangelical church has been growing in influence since the 1960's. Even though there has been a revival of the Mayan culture and its religious rituals, there is a rise in church planting among indigenous groups. Bible translations have aided this, and all tribes in Guatemala have been reached with the Gospel.

TASTE OF THE NATIONS (SUKKOT)

This year after our Sukkot celebration we are having a cultural fair that celebrates different nations through our food. We are looking for people to represent their nations by making food to share at the event. Please no pork products or shellfish. If you are interested in running a table please contact Evy.Rivera@adathatikvah.org
