

How can we actively strive for unity in our families, especially in blended family situations, as Paul encourages in Ephesians 4:3?

In what ways might our personal choices and actions, like those of Abraham and Sarah, impact future generations? How can we make wiser decisions?

How can we guard against feeling contempt towards others in our family unit, particularly when dealing with ex-spouses or step-parents?

What practical steps can we take to view family members, including those we may struggle with, through the eyes of Christ?

How might our treatment of biological parents or step-parents affect our children's relationships and overall family dynamics?

In what ways can jealousy disrupt family unity, and how can we combat this destructive emotion with love?

How can we apply the principle of 'above all, put on love' (Colossians 3:14) in challenging family situations?

What lessons can we learn from the story of Abraham, Sarah, Hagar, Ishmael, and Isaac about handling complex family relationships?

How might our families be different if we consistently treated others as we would want to be treated, especially in blended family contexts?

Reflecting on Luke 11:17, how can we work to prevent division in our homes and build a united family despite differences or past conflicts?