Announcements

Attention all ministry leaders: A Leadership Meeting will be held on Tuesday, February 10th at 6:30 PM.

Urban Ministries Clarksville is located at 217 South 3rd St. will provide assistance with utility bills on Monday from 9:00 AM to 12:00 PM. They also offer support through food and clothing assistance, as well as a safe house shelter for victims of domestic abuse.

Greater Missionary Baptist Church will honor the legacy of Pastor Willie J. Freeman on the Third Sunday in February. In remembrance of his life and ministry, members are asked to wear John 3:16 T-shirts as a symbol of faith, love, and service.

As part of honoring Pastor Freeman's legacy, we will continue the mission work he exemplified by visiting a local nursing home to bless the residents with non-slip socks. This outreach will take place on Saturday, February 21st, All members are invited to participate and assist with distributing socks during our visit.

Blue Star Families will host an MLK Day of Service: Lunch and Learn for Youth on Saturday, February 14th, from 10:00 AM to 2:00 PM, in the Visionary Center.

This event qualifies for community service hours. Lunch will be served, followed by a lesson and a community service project. Please sign up if you would like to participate.

The GMBC Prayer Team would like to invite everyone to join them on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday mornings at 6:30a AM for a powerful hour of prayer.

Sarah Rector (The Richest Color Girl In The World)

Sarah Rector, also known as Sarah Rector Campbell and Sarah Campbell Crawford, (March 3, 1902 – July 22, 1967) was an American oil magnate since childhood. Under the Treaty of 1866, due to birthright as a Black grandchild of Creek Indians born before the American Civil War, she received an allotment. It was surprisingly discovered to be oil-rich and produced over US$300 per day, so she was known as the "Richest Colored Girl in the World".

Early Life and Family

Sarah Rector was born in 1902 near the all-black town of Taft, located in Indian Territory. In 1907, it was absorbed as the eastern portion of the new state of Oklahoma. She had five siblings. Her parents were Rose McQueen and husband Joseph Rector (both born 1881), who were the Black grandchildren of Creek Indians enslaved before the Civil War. Their ancestors became members of the Muscogee Creek Nation after the Treaty of 1866. As such, they and their descendants were listed as Freedmen on the Dawes Rolls. They were entitled to land allotments under the Treaty of 1866 made by the United States with the Five Civilized Tribes. Because these tribes had allied with the Confederacy, the US required new treaties by which their slaves were freed and became citizens of these nations. This paralleled the abolition of slavery in the US.

Sarah's father Joseph was the son of John Rector, a Creek Freedman. John Rector's father, Benjamin McQueen, had been enslaved by Reilly Grayson, a Creek Indian. John Rector's mother, Mollie McQueen, was enslaved by Muscogee chief Opothleyahola, who fought in the Seminole Wars and split with the tribe. He moved with his slaves and followers to Kansas.

Each member of the Rector household received headrights allotments as Creek land was distributed. Sarah Rector was allotted 159.14 acres. The breakup of communal lands was a way to extinguish tribal rights in the process of integration of the Indian Territory with Oklahoma Territory.

Oil Strike and Wealth

The parcel allotted to Sarah Rector was located in Glenpool, 60 miles from the Rector family home. Its infertile soil was considered unsuitable for farming, with better land being reserved for white settlers and Creek members of the tribe.

The Rector family lived simply but not in poverty; however, the $30 annual property tax on Sarah's parcel was such a burden that her father petitioned the Muskogee County Court to sell the land. His petition was denied because of certain restrictions placed on the land, so he was required to continue paying the taxes. To help cover this expense, in February 1911, Joseph Rector leased Sarah's parcel to the Standard Oil Company. In 1913, the independent oil driller B.B. Jones sank what became a "gusher" well, with a daily yield of 2,500 barrels of oil and US$300 of income. Oklahoma law at the time required assignment of "well-respected" whites to act as guardians for full-blooded Indians, black adults, and children who were citizens of Indian Territory with significant property and money.

Thus, as soon as Sarah began to receive this windfall from oil drilling, there was pressure to change her guardianship from her parents to a local white resident. A family acquaintance named T.J. (or J.T.) Porter was chosen. Her allotment subsequently became part of the Cushing-Drumright Oil Field. In October 1913, she received royalties of $11,567.

As news of Rector's wealth spread worldwide, she received requests for loans, money gifts, and marriage proposals, although she was only 11 years old. Due to her wealth, in 1913, the Oklahoma Legislature made an effort to have her declared an honorary white, allowing her the benefits of elevated social standing in the segregated society, such as riding first-class on trains.

In 1914, the African-American journal, The Chicago Defender, began to take an interest in Rector, just as rumors began that she was a white immigrant who was being kept in poverty. The newspaper published an article claiming mismanagement by the white guardians of her estate. National African-American leaders Booker T. Washington and W. E. B. Du Bois both became concerned about Rector's welfare. In June 1914, a special agent for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), James C. Waters Jr., sent a memo to Du Bois regarding her situation. Waters had been corresponding with the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the United States Children's Bureau over concerns regarding the mismanagement of Rector's estate. He wrote of her white financial guardian: "Is it not possible to have her cared for in a decent manner and by people of her own race, instead of by a member of a race which would deny her and her kind the treatment accorded a good yard dog?"

This prompted Du Bois to establish the Children's Department of the NAACP, which investigated claims of white guardians who were suspected of depriving black children of their land and wealth. Washington also intervened to help the Rector family. In October of that year, Sarah was enrolled in the Children's School, a boarding school at the Tuskegee Institute in Alabama, headed by Washington. Upon graduation, she attended the Institute.

Rector was a millionaire by the time she turned 18 in 1920. She owned stocks, bonds, a boarding house, businesses, and a 2,000-acre piece of prime river bottomland.

At that time, she left Tuskegee and, with her entire family, moved to Kansas City, Missouri. She purchased a house on 12th Street.

Rector enjoyed her wealth, with a comfortable life and a taste for fine clothing and cars. She hosted lavish parties and entertained celebrities such as Count Basie and Duke Ellington.

Like many others, Rector lost most of her wealth during the Great Depression; she had to sell the mansion. But, she remained solvent and lived comfortably for the rest of her life.

Death

She died on July 22, 1967, at the age of 65. She is interred in Blackjack Cemetery in her childhood hometown of Taft.

Personal life

Soon after moving to Kansas City, when she was 17 or 18, she married local businessman Kenneth Campbell in 1920. The wedding was a very private affair with only her mother and Campbell's paternal grandmother present. The couple had three sons, Kenneth (born 1925), Leonard (born 1926), and Clarence (born 1929), and they divorced in 1930. In 1934, she married restaurant owner William Crawford, and they remained together until her death in 1967.

Sarah Rector has four living grandchildren of Clarence and Bobbie Campbell (living): Sharon R. Campbell-Marshall, Darron Campbell, Sheryl (Campbell) Fleming, and Sarah Campbell.
