R. T. France, New International Commentary: “The master [the king] was willing to forgive a debt the slave could never have paid, but will NOT forgive his refusal of an act of generosity which was within his power. If he is determined to insist on his just deserts, he shall have them. The forgiveness which was freely granted is now withdrawn, not because the slave is any more likely to be able to pay the debt, but because he has proved himself unworthy of his master's mercy.”
