

Breakout Questions – 10/27/21

1. How did that last session of worship songs feel?
2. When it comes to music that you listened to before Christianity, is it true that music in general and certain songs in particular used to make you “feel” a certain way and now they can even bring back memories and actual physical feelings?

Is it possible that music is meant to do something to us and in us on a level beyond words and our ability to describe? If so, please discuss the following:

- What could be happening for certain people during worship services?
- How important is it, or how valuable could it be to listen to worship music?
- How dangerous could music with lyrics that are Anti-God be for us?

3. Do you consider your tithe an act of worship?
4. “Responses” include but are not limited to: Active listening, head nods, Amen's, note taking, having a physical bible, coming to the altar for pray and/or repentance, etc.

During the messages on Sundays/Wednesdays have you considered your "Responses" as important? Important for you, important to God, important to the speakers, important to others in the service?

5. As a follow up to responding and engaging in services are there any questions about order or distractions or consideration for others during services?
