5-Day Bible Reading Plan and Devotional Guide

Themes: God's Love, Faith, Salvation, Hope, and Divine Presence in Suffering

Day 1: A God Unlike Any Other

Reading: Psalm 113:5-6 — God is exalted above all nations, yet he stoops down to care for the humble and lowly.

Devotional: The morning opened with a striking poem about the strangeness of Christianity — a God who entered a womb, asked a woman for water, and washed his servants' feet. This is not a distant, untouchable deity. This is a God who condescends in love. When life feels overwhelming and God feels far away, return to this truth: the Creator of the universe chose proximity to you. He is not watching from a distance. He is present in your ordinary, broken, complicated life.

Ask yourself today: Where have I been too quick to assume God is absent? What would change if I truly believed he stoops down toward me?

Day 2: The God Who Keeps His Wounds

Reading: John 20:24-29 — Thomas encounters the risen Jesus, who invites him to examine the marks left by the crucifixion, and Thomas responds in worship.

Devotional: The poem read during worship posed a question that lingers: why did the resurrected Christ still bear his wounds? He could have emerged from the grave without a single scar. Instead, heaven decided some wounds were too meaningful to erase. God does not hide his suffering from us — he displays it as proof that he understands ours. Your pain is not foreign to him. Your grief, betrayal, and loss are recognized by a Savior who chose to be identified by his own.

Whatever wound you carry today, bring it to the only God whose scars make him more trustworthy, not less.

Day 3: The Thief of Entitlement

Reading: Genesis 3:1-6 — The serpent tempts Eve by questioning whether God has truly been generous, planting seeds of doubt and a sense of deserving more.

Devotional: The sermon traced pride and entitlement all the way back to the garden. The serpent's strategy was not brute force — it was a whisper: "Don't you deserve more?" That same whisper still works today. When we feel overlooked, undervalued, or treated unfairly, entitlement creeps in and poisons gratitude. As the sermon noted, once those lenses go on, everything looks wrong — other people's blessings become offenses, and God's goodness becomes suspect.

The antidote is not pretending life is perfect. It is choosing to trust the God who works all things together, even when the arrangement does not look the way we expected.

Day 4: More Than Conquerors

Reading: Romans 8:35-39 — Nothing in all creation — not hardship, danger, or death — is able to separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus.

Devotional: The sermon drew a clear line between victim and victor. Choosing to be a conqueror does not mean denying pain or pretending hardship is not real. It means refusing to let circumstances have the final word over your identity. As the sermon illustrated through a grueling mountain hike and even a plate of unwanted food, victory often looks small and unglamorous — but it is still victory. God does not call you to a life of passive endurance. He calls you to active, Spirit-empowered overcoming.

Today, identify one area where you have been living as a victim. Ask God for the courage to take one step toward being a conqueror.

Day 5: Clothed in Humility

Reading: 1 Peter 5:5-7 — Believers are called to clothe themselves in humility toward one another, trusting that God opposes the proud but gives grace to the humble, and casting all anxiety on him because he cares.

Devotional: The sermon closed with a powerful reminder: humility is not thinking you are nothing. It is acknowledging that you do not have all the answers and remaining open to receiving them. God often sends insight through unexpected people — a friend, a family member, even someone who does not share your faith. When we resist those messengers, we resist the transformation God is offering. We want his blessings without his refining work. True thanksgiving is born not from perfect circumstances but from a humble heart that trusts God to make beautiful what is broken.

Surrender one area of resistance today and watch what grace begins to do.
