Summary

Using the back-to-back healings in Mark 5, Pastor Jaime shows that both Jairus and the woman with the issue of blood connected with the power of God through faith released by their words. He challenges believers to check whether what they say actually matches what they claim to believe, reminding us that words are meant to declare and create, not just describe. He closes with an encouragement to stand firm when answers are delayed or circumstances worsen: “do not be afraid, only believe.”

Top Points

1. Faith is what got Jesus’ attention. Jairus left his dying daughter’s side to find Jesus. True Bible faith can stop heaven in its tracks.
2. Faith is released through words. Jairus’ words (“if you will come and lay hands on her...”) put a demand on the power of God, just as the woman’s did.
3. Words are for declaring, not just describing. Most people use words to report how they feel or what they see. Faith speaks what it believes and what it wants to receive from God.
4. Your words can’t contradict your faith. You can’t say “I’m believing for healing” and “my sickness” in the same breath. Confession is a consistent statement, not a mood that rises and falls like waves.
5. A delay is not a disconnect. Jesus was interrupted on the way to Jairus’ house, but He was still working on that little girl. If healing hasn’t shown up yet, don’t conclude it didn’t work.

6. When circumstances get worse, stand firm. When word came that the girl was dead, Jesus immediately told Jairus not to be afraid and to only believe, and He cleared the room of doubt and unbelief.
7. Jesus spoke what He wanted, not what He saw. “She’s sleeping” was Jesus creating, not describing.
8. Take inventory. Examine what comes out of your mouth about your health, marriage, finances, and business, and make adjustments.
9. God still needs our faith, and we release it with our words.
