

When Jesus was born, the small town of Bethlehem was flooded with people who had moved away returning because of the census. They were so busy—with crowded streets, overbooked hotels, and increased economic possibilities—that they missed the birth of Jesus right under their noses. But just outside the town, in the quietness of the night, there were shepherds watching their flocks who were very much aware that something wonderful was taking place. Let's notice two things about the shepherds that might help us keep from missing what really matters this Christmas.

1. They were in a _____ to _____ from God.

2. They were willing to _____ on what God _____ them.

When Jesus was born, the small town of Bethlehem was flooded with people who had moved away returning because of the census. They were so busy—with crowded streets, overbooked hotels, and increased economic possibilities—that they missed the birth of Jesus right under their noses. But just outside the town, in the quietness of the night, there were shepherds watching their flocks who were very much aware that something wonderful was taking place. Let's notice two things about the shepherds that might help us keep from missing what really matters this Christmas.

1. They were in a _____ to _____ from God.

2. They were willing to _____ on what God _____ them.