

God's grace is one of the greatest gifts we will ever receive—but grace was never meant to be wasted. In 2 Corinthians 6–7, Paul challenges us to avoid both legalism and license. Instead, grace calls us to life in the Spirit—a life of holiness, love, obedience, and faithful representation of Christ. The question is not simply whether we have received God's grace, but whether we are allowing that grace to transform the way we live.

Two problems in the Corinthian church:

1. _____

Legalism is tempting because it appeals to our _____.

God is not impressed with all our _____.

2. _____

Instead of pointing our finger at someone else to justify how we want to live, we need instead to _____ our own _____.

Do I really understand that the reality of _____ is life in the Spirit, realizing I'm no longer living for _____ but for the one who _____ for me?
