- There are at least four common “capacity limiters” that prevent people from performing at their best:
  - Entitlement-the belief that you deserve an unearned privilege, opportunity, or reward
  - Comparison-the practice of over/under-estimating value by measuring yourself against others
  - Risk aversion-the avoidance of risk, often through assessment, management, or indecision
  - Self pity-the excessive feelings about one’s own troubles and challenges
- Which "capacity limiter" is most challenging for you to deal with when you experience it at work?
- Which "capacity limiter" is most challenging for you to fight within yourself?
- What “gifts” do you believe God has given you to serve others?
- Are you able to use your gifts regularly in your current “station” (responsibility or relationship)? If so, do you believe your gifts are valued by your coworkers or clients? If not, what keeps you in that station?
- Are you satisfied with the investments you make in relationships with others? Why or why not?
- If the Master showed up this week to ask you what you have done with all that he has given you, how would you answer him?
