

Guadalajara

Hello Family and Friends,

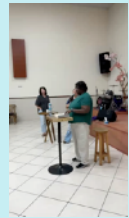

Coming to you live from Guadalajara, Mexico. I arrived here late night on July 3. My flight was great, I had the whole row to myself and I was able to comfortably stretch out and sleep for the majority of the four hour flight.

Since getting here I've jumped right into the team schedule and had some pretty active days. It has been a struggle to get adjusted to the two hour time difference as far as sleep goes. I have a complicated history with sleep anyway and any change in bedtimes usually affect me negatively. I still have a few summer classes left so I've spent my Tuesdays focusing on homework and attending class via Zoom.

I really enjoy the Sunday worship experience. It still amazes me that the Holy Spirit moves, even when I don't understand the language. My focus truly has to be learning Spanish, so far there has been very little English here outside of the home.

I still haven't made any long term commitments but I have decided to come back here in late September for the Fuego y Gozo (Fire and Joy) Conference to be held October 2-4. I will be a part of the intercessory prayer team. All of the speakers for the conference are English speaking and will use translators, the prayer team is made up of English speakers and Spanish speakers.

Please continue to keep me in prayer and for consideration for monthly financial support as I seek the Lord about serving here in Mexico or if He has somewhere else for me in the world! Thank you!
Love, Sherika & Bogart

Teaching

I had the privilege of teaching on Praise and Worship at the Supernatural School of Ministry.

Just me

My first Friday or Saturday night here in Guadalajara, with the team doing some street ministry

Bogart

I'm definitely missing this sweet boy! I'm sure he's having his fill of chicken nuggets and daily walks w/Crystale.
