Have you ever had an experience where you would've felt like God was using your unique gift for the benefit of somebody else? What was that experience like?

In Matthew 5, Jesus took the civil law of an eye for an eye, intended to restrain our tendency towards vengeance, even a step further when he speaks of turning the other cheek. In doing so he prioritized forgiveness over vengeance but how do we balance that with the pursuit of justice in our world?

When we look at the cities of refuge they were designed to be within reach of anyone who would need them. When it comes to the needs of the world around us, proximity matters. What are some ways we should be in proximity and present with the needs around us?

The cities of refuge demonstrated a generous hospitality to those who are in need. What are ways we can live this out in the world around us?
