1. Where do you find yourself being the spiritual minority in your spheres of life? What has that experience been like for you?

2. The first strategy to survive and thrive in cultural exile is: “Unity must be stronger than division”. How does our culture make it hard to be unified? In what ways do you think you’re practicing unity well?

3. The second strategy is: “Convictions must be stronger than conformity”. What are some of the biggest temptations of our culture to compromise our values?
How does refusing to compromise on the small matters effect your resolve to stay strong in more significant ones?

4. The third strategy is: “God’s voice must be stronger than the world’s voice”. What voices are strongest in your life and what do they say about you? How do we turn God’s voice louder and the world’s quieter?
