Mid-Week Devotion (Take time to pray & respond to the following)

A day is coming when absolutely everything will change. Whether this change will be favorable or unfavorable for you hinges entirely upon your response to Jesus' offer of forgiveness and salvation through Him alone. Resist the urge to wallow in the pessimism and fear that so characterizes this present age. If you are a born-again follower of Christ, your best day is yet to come. You can count on this.

When that day arrives, the world will witness the physical return of Christ. His triumphant return as the King of Kings and Lord of Lords will not only mark the conclusion of the old order but also inaugurate His eternal reign. In that pivotal moment, every hope held by His beloved and every fear held by His enemies will be confirmed. There exists no neutral ground or room for indecision or apathy. You must purposefully determine your allegiance.

The Glorious Appearing of Christ will bring together His entire Church into fellowship and community. The reunion and rejoicing of that day will surpass our wildest imaginations—it will be untainted by sinful distrust and division. In the limitless time of Heaven, God will teach us how to know and be known as only He can. At the center of it all will be our Savior with whom we will see, hear, speak, and serve. This is the future that awaits all who trust in Jesus. From time to time, we need to remind ourselves what is coming.

Take the time now, to prayerfully let the Holy Spirit minister to you. Ask Him to stoke the fires of your heart, invigorate your love for the life He has given, knowing that this is only the beginning.
