Mid-Week Devotion

(Pray & respond to the following)

You have a choice to make. You can seek contentment in the temporary and ever-changing things of this world or you can resolve to find your contentment in the hope that God gives. He offers you satisfaction that far transcends anything you can attain for yourself. While we rightly take satisfaction in the goodness and righteous pleasures of life, we must remember that when it comes to our contentment, God is enough.

Dependence on God is a discipline that must be exercised. Through the working of the Holy Spirit, God humbles our hearts and prompts us to let go of concerns and aspirations that are not rightfully ours to carry. Along the way, He filters out worldly lies and deception and exchanges them for a calm and quiet soul unfettered by fear. The result is that we are enabled to place our hope in His Son now and forever.

Are you content with God—not only in the idea of God, but in a personal relationship with Him as well? Is the time you spend in worship a sincere expression of your contentment in Him or is it merely the carrying out of a routine? Is anything presently serving as a false source of contentment in your life?

With prayerful consideration, make a list of the things that compete with your contentment in God. Ask Him to reveal the proper place and application of those things in your life. Be prepared to act in accordance with whatever He reveals, even if it means having to let go of some things. Verbally tell God of your need for Him and affirm your renewed commitment to find your hope in Him alone.
