ASK, LISTEN, LEARN

- When you think about how you parent your children, do you tend to view yourself as owner or steward? Or something else?
- What is one thing that would change in your parenting if you thought of yourself as a steward?
- What things tend to fill the schedules and conversations of your family? In what way might this reflect the way you are training up your children?
- What is one conversation you've had recently with one of your children where you had to teach them to apply the gospel to their life?
- What are some places the world usually goes to find wisdom?
- Where are the places in your family where you go to find wisdom? Do any of those need to change?
- Do you have a regular rhythm of family worship? What does that look like? If not, what is one way you can adjust your schedule to have one?
- How was discipline viewed in your home growing up?
- How do you view discipline? Do you have a plan for it, or is it more of a responsive, corrective action?
- Do you tend to wield a 'rod of anger' or a 'rod of apathy' with your children? Or something else?
- How can you consistently remind your children of their future hope?
- Is there anywhere you need to be reminded of the hope we have in Christ, for your children? Spend time praying with each other about this.
