

Real World Skit

You and an assistant will read about helping a friend recognize a sin. Bring props to add interest!

Student 1: My backpack will hardly close!

Student 2: What do you have in there?

Student 1: Well, my homework papers of course, and my jacket. It's way too hot to wear it home.

Student 2: Oh, I see. Speaking of going home, you still want me to come over today?

Student 1: Yeah! I have a new video game that takes two players. I've been waiting all week to play it!

Student 2: Great! Let's get going.

Student 1: Oh, hold on. I'm supposed to go pick up my brother's homework for the past few days.

Student 2: Is he still sick?

Student 1: Yeah, he's missed a whole week of school. I think he's lucky, but he hates to miss anything. He's such a nerd!

Student 2: He's probably tired of being sick though.

Student 1: Don't feel too bad for him. He's always getting good grades and making me look bad. He laughed when my parents didn't let me play video games last week because I bombed my math test.

Student 2: Well, don't you think you should still go get his stuff?

Student 1: Nah. My backpack is already too full, and I want to get going so we have time to beat my new game!

Student 2: But what about your brother? He'll have to catch up on a lot of school work later.

Student 1: It'll serve my brother right to miss some homework and get a bad grade for once. Then he'll know how I feel.

Student 2: Uh, wait a minute. Do you remember that time we played my new racing game?

Student 1: Yeah! That game was awesome!

Print two copies, one for you and an assistant.

Student 2: And remember how I didn't tell you about the super-speed button combo?

Student 1: Oh yeah. I kept wondering how your car kept speeding off and leaving me in the dust. You won like 20 games!

Student 2: You were pretty mad at me, remember?

Student 1: Of course I remember.

Student 2: That was wrong of me to keep that from you just so I could win.

Student 1: But you said you were sorry and then told me how to do it. Then we had some great races! Why are you bringing that up now? I'd forgotten about it.

Student 2: I just want to make sure that you're not making the same mistake I did.

Student 1: Huh? What do you mean?

Student 2: Don't you think that maybe your brother might feel the same way you did when I didn't help you out before the game?

Student 1: Oh! I don't know.

Student 2: Didn't you feel better when I finally told you how to use the controls?

Student 1: Yeah. I see what you mean. I shouldn't leave my brother's homework just because he can be annoying and I want to do better than him. I guess that's kind of selfish of me.

Student 2: (nods) Right.

Student 1: (sighs) Okay. I better run to his teacher and get his stuff.

Student 2: I'll come with you.

Student 1: Thanks.

Student 2: Maybe we can each take some of his books in our backpacks to share the load.

Student 1: Sounds good. Hey, and thanks for helping me see that I was about to do something I'd be sorry for.

Student 2: Glad to help!
