When Jesus Manifested His Glory

By Peter Leithart

Jesus turned water to wine, His first sign (John 2:11), an epiphany of the Word made flesh.

Of what is it a sign? Of many things.

The wedding takes place on the "third day" (2:1), which is the seventh day in the sequence of days in John's first chapters (see 1:29, 35, 43).

During the creation week, grain and fruit trees spring from the ground on the third day. Life bursts out on the third day; things move from old to new.

Of course, the great third day of the gospel story is Jesus' resurrection (John 2:19-20). The third day of the wedding anticipates the final sign of John's Gospel.

Jesus uses the water of Jewish purification (John 2:6). Jesus' sign not only reveals His divine power but also symbolizes the shift from the purity rules of the old order to the wine-joy of the new.

When Jesus Manifested His Glory

The water is in stone jars (John 2:6), and in drawing wine from the stone, Jesus proves Himself greater than Moses, who drew mere water from the rock.

The six waterpots are large, containing 20-30 gallons. Human beings are also containers (see Psa 2:9; Jer 18:1-4; Rom 9:19-24; 2 Tim 2:20). In John 2, the pots specifically symbolize Jesus' disciples.

By the time of the wedding, Jesus has six disciples (two disciples of John [John 1:35-37], who each bring brothers [1:40-41]; then Philip, who finds Nathanael [1:43-45]).

Six waterpots, six disciples. In transforming the water, Jesus pledges also to transform the disciples, so they bubble up with the Bridegroom's wine (cf. John 3:29).

The entire episode manifests the humility of Jesus. When the new wine is served, the people praise the bridegroom for reserving the best wine for last.

Jesus doesn't deflect the glory back to Himself. He stands aside to let the bridegroom take the credit.

And so from the first sign, Jesus' glory is the glory of humility, the glory of the cross.
