Key Talking Points:

- Last Friday a terrorist attack killed more than 130 people during a rock concert in Moscow. Now, the U.S. border chief says he is very concerned a similar attack could happen here in America with our wide-open southern border.
- CBN news reports four men accused of staging the Russia concert hall attack Friday appeared before a Moscow court showing signs of severe beatings. All four were charged with terrorism. One appeared to be barely conscious during Sunday's hearing.
- The men are from the central Asian republic of Tajikistan, which borders Afghanistan.
- The massacre happened in an auditorium on the outskirts of Moscow as a crowd gathered for a sold-out rock concert. People in their seats heard what sounded like fireworks. At least four men with automatic weapons had begun firing repeatedly into the crowd. Then they set the concert hall on fire.
- Isis-k – the terror group's affiliate in Afghanistan – was quick to claim responsibility for the attack. The same group is also responsible for the killing of 13 U.S. service members during the botched pullout from Afghanistan.
- Russian president Vladimir Putin claims the men were headed to Ukraine where persons there were preparing to let them cross the border, but vice president kamala Harris told ABC that's not true.
- Regardless, U.S. leaders are very concerned with the possibility that a similar terrorist massacre could happen here in the U.S. or against Americans overseas.
- The head of the U.S. border patrol, Jason Owens told CBN news that this is what keeps him and others in law enforcement up at night—they have no idea who is coming into our country across our vulnerable border.
- Former FBI special agent eric caron told CBN news he's especially concerned about America's ports, where customs and border protection physically inspects only 3 percent of incoming containers.
- "We have 328 ports of entry into America. They all have to be secure, and many of them are soft," caron said.
- He says last year there were over 1,000 joint terrorism task force cases related to sleeper cells and terrorism in the U.S.
- Tying in with all of this, Ron Paul just went on tucker Carlson's show and told Americans they should prepare for a black swan event that would pop up due to these dangerous times we find ourselves in.

- Just the news reports a "diversity, equity and inclusion" newsletter that highlighted cross-dressing and woke language was recently circulated in the U.S. intelligence community, according to reports.

- Part of the newsletter highlighted an anonymous officer who said, "I am an intelligence officer, and I am a man who likes to wear women's clothes sometimes. I think my experiences as someone who cross-dresses have sharpened the skills i use as an intelligence officer, particularly critical thinking, and perspective-taking."
- If that's not bad enough, the newsletter also had a section on the importance of language and words and how removing "biased" language is important.
- It stated words such as "cakewalk" or "grandfathered" shouldn't be used by officers because they have ties to slavery.
- One article, from the perspective of an intelligence official, points out that some of his training, "conflated Islamic beliefs with terrorism, and that the use of such language "is offensive and alienates our Muslim American colleagues."
- America's voice news points out at the end of their article that the overall themes of the newsletter was the importance of words and making spy agencies more inclusive places, instead of important things like innocent people dying at the hands of illegal immigrants because of our out-of-control southern border.

In the News (Topic 5 of 5) JAPANESE STUDY URGES HALT ON MRNA VACCINES

Article: Japanese Preprint Study Urges Halt on mRNA Vaccines Amid Blood Bank Contamination Fears

Article Link: <https://www.thegatewaypundit.com/2024/03/japanese-preprint-study-urges-halt-mrna-vaccines-amid/>

Key Talking Points:

- In medical news, a Japanese preprint study urges a halt to mRNA vaccines amid blood bank contamination fears.
- The Gateway Pundit reports the theory described in the study as spikeopathy suggests that the spike proteins presence in blood transfusions, could lead to various health problems including blood clots, cardiovascular issues, and a wide array of systemic diseases affecting multiple organs.

- The study meticulously reviews the existing literature and reports on post-vaccination phenomena, such as the persistence of vaccine components like mRNA and lipid nanoparticles (LNPS) in the bloodstream of vaccinated individuals.
- It highlights concerns that these components might not only remain in the donor's blood but could also be passed on to recipients through transfusions, potentially leading to unintended health consequences.
- Zero Hedge reported that repeated vaccinations can make people more vulnerable to covid-19. If the blood contains spike proteins, it becomes necessary to remove these proteins prior to administration, and there is no such technology currently available, per the authors.
- In addition, contrary to earlier expectations, genes and proteins from genetic vaccines have been found to persist in the blood of vaccine recipients for "prolonged periods of time."
- The authors conclude by advocating for the suspension of covid shots until a more thorough assessment is conducted and discarding all blood products until a solution is found.
- The Gateway Pundit had previously reported in a separate article that the American Red Cross does not separate blood donations based on covid 19 vaccination status. Therefore, anyone receiving a blood transfusion could be potentially at risk.
