

How can we cultivate a spirit of seeking Jesus in our daily lives, like the wise men who traveled far to find Him?

In what ways might our intelligence or worldly wisdom sometimes hinder our faith, and how can we overcome this?

How can we ensure that we're not just giving God our leftovers, but truly putting Him first in all areas of our lives?

What does it mean to 'walk a new road' after encountering Jesus, and how might this look in practical terms?

How can we be more attentive to the Holy Spirit's guidance in our daily lives, especially when it comes to sharing our faith?

In what ways can we cultivate a spirit of worship and praise, even in difficult circumstances?

How might our perspective on giving (time, talents, treasure) change if we truly saw Jesus as the King of Kings?

What does it mean to 'empty ourselves' so that we can be filled with Christ, and why is this challenging?

How can we balance the pursuit of worldly success with the call to prioritize our relationship with God?

In what ways can we leave a lasting impact on others through our faith, like the examples shared in the sermon?