

LIFE GROUP DISCUSSION QUESTIONS

Dec 14

Jonathan described God's glory as something written into the fabric of creation—patterns, beauty, and even “illogical” order like the Fibonacci sequence.

Have you noticed moments of beauty, design, or wonder recently that gently turned your attention toward God rather than yourself?

Key Question

Jonathan said that “the glory of God is humans fully alive.”

When you think about your everyday life right now, what helps you feel most alive—and what tends to drain that sense of life from you?

The message invited us to rethink the idea that glorifying God means stepping out of the picture rather than stepping fully into who we are.

How has your understanding of “glorifying God” been shaped by your church background or personal experience, and where might that understanding be shifting?

Key Question

Jonathan described peace (shalom) not as the absence of conflict, but as wholeness—nothing missing.

Is there something that feels incomplete or a bit out of balance in your world right now, and if so, what might it look like to take a simple step toward the kind of wholeness we've been talking about?

Jesus spent most of his life loving his community quietly and faithfully, working in ordinary places like a tool shed.

What is an ordinary space or role in your life where you sense God inviting you to bring presence, care, or light—without needing recognition?

Key Question

The angels' song proclaims peace and favor for all people, reaching far beyond familiar boundaries.

Where might following Jesus gently stretch you—perhaps beyond comfort or habit—toward greater compassion for people you don't naturally relate to?
