Martha's Musings

Tomorrow is a special day, as I am having lunch in Waco with five wonderful girls who were in my high school graduating class. We were great friends at the time, which was 50+ years ago. We were part of each other's weddings, attended each other's baby showers, and have done our best to remain in touch. Most of us still live in Texas, although not necessarily in Irving, our collective hometown, as one lives in Wyoming. God's grace and careful planning have allowed this upcoming get-together, for which I am so very grateful. I know we all have aged, but I also know that we remain "us" inside, and I expect us to chatter along like no more than a day has passed. For the younger group in the congregation, please be aware that this ability to just pick up where you left off is nothing more than a tremendous gift from God. Of course, there are holes and gaps in our connections. That is what marriage, babies, careers, and grandbabies can do. And praise God for each of those! That means we have been blessed with loving families and a lifetime to work at a fulfilling career. We will have no trouble filling in those sweet gaps. We loved each other then, and we love each other now. Magnolia Market, here we come!

Blessings,

Martha Arizpe, St. John's Prayer Team
