Martha's Musings

As I get older, I find myself interested in a variety of things which did not interest me when I was younger. They might have, had I had time to really pay attention to them, but working full-time and being a wife and mother took up most of my time. Plus, the computer had not been invented, and the wonders of Pinterest did not yet exist. But now they do, and I have become a happy devotee. Hobbies galore jump off the screen, and I have discovered the wonders of paper crafts, button crafts, Styrofoam crafts, sewing and knitting crafts, etc. Also, folks collect practically anything. The Arizpe household has some collections – I love bells and angels – but I still enjoy seeing what interests others. Etsy has caught my attention, and I find it pretty fascinating. I could not help but notice that God created mankind so that not only are we different in appearance – like the individuals we are – we also have different interests. Sharing those interests with others is both fun and educational. The Good Lord, once again, has saved Mankind from itself. Boredom does not have to be in your current life or in your future. Do you have a special skill? Have you figured out how to make paper chrysanthemums? Would you like to learn? Do you have the ability to add decorative tile to the border of a mirror – without having it fall off? Would you enjoy learning how? Do you collect thimbles/plates/coins/miniature anything? Then Pinterest and Etsy are for you. You can enlarge your world one hobby at a time, always knowing that the God who created the brain that literally makes our bodies function gave that same brain the ability to expand its own borders. We can walk, talk, and figure out what to do with all those extra buttons. Once again, we have been blessed.

Blessings,
Martha Arizpe, St. John's Prayer Team
