Martha's Musings

Nature has been sharing some of its most unusual creatures with me lately. Fortunately for me, I have a nephew who is a Conservation Manager with Dallas Parks and Recreation. He is definitely "the guy" for any nature question to assist the uninformed. So, I take photos of what I see and forward them to him. I recently sent him photos of what turned out to be a stick bug and an orb weaver spider. The stick bug was sitting on the porch railing, and thinking it really was a stick, I almost flicked it off. Common sense prevailed and he survived his meeting with me. As for the spider, it was much bigger than any regular spider, and it gave me the creeps. Brett related it was non-venomous, and I hope that spider is grateful, as that info most definitely saved his life. This morning, as I was leaving my driveway, I saw what looked like a lizard, immobile, in a stance that appeared to me like he was trying to climb up my neighbor's tree and was interrupted by my movement. Then again, what I was looking at also had the same colors of the bark on said tree. I pulled over, lowered my window to be sure if I was looking at a lizard or just tree bark, but unless bark now has a tail, what I saw was a lizard. Bigger than the geckos we have on our back porch – much bigger, but smaller than, say, an iguana. (Fun fact: Iguanas are EVERYWHERE in Puerto Vallarta. Want to lounge by the pool? So do the iguanas.) If I see him again, I will take a photo of Brett. I am not a fan of bugs or reptiles. But they have a place here on earth, and, like humanity, was created by God. Just one of many things I just don't get, but that is as it should be. Faith does not require understanding of the works of Our Creator. Isn't that great – for all of us?

Blessings,
