Sunday Group Discussion Questions

#1 – Why do you think understanding that the idea of an all-powerful creator God is possible, and even rational, is so important? What will people believe if they see no possibility of there actually being a God?

#2 – What are your thoughts on the design argument for God? (The evidence of design in the world points to a designer) Since the argument against design being a proof for the existence of God is that what looks like design is really small evolutionary changes over time, how important is it to understand that according to scientist Dr. Werner Gitt, “New blueprints for new functions or new organs cannot arise from mutations. Mutations cannot be the source of new information?”

#3 – What are your thoughts on the sign of the universe argument for God? (The universe has not always existed according to the majority of scientists, it could not create itself, and therefore it must have been created)

#4 – What are your thoughts on the existence of the morality argument for God? Where do morality and order and logic all come from, if we are all really the result of chemicals reacting together in ways they should never have reacted together in the first place, in a universe with order where life follows logical expected results?

#5 – If the chances of life occurring by chance are the same as flipping a coin and having it land on heads 100 times in a row, which would require flipping that coin 300 million times a second for a quadrillion years for it to ever have happen once, then isn't the “life occurred by chance” also a belief of faith? Isn't it just as reasonable to believe that “in the beginning God created...?”
