Trump-backed crypto firm partners with Chinese AI venture

Trump-backed World Liberty Financial is collaborating with a Hong Kong venture offering AI models built by Chinese companies the administration has flagged as national security risks.

A review of WorldClaw's website found 43 of its 90 available models, nearly half, came from Alibaba, Baidu, Z.ai and other Chinese firms. The Pentagon has designated Alibaba and Baidu as Chinese military-aligned companies, barring the Defense Department from doing business with them. Z.ai sits on the Commerce Department's entity list, which severely restricts access to U.S. technology on grounds it advances China's military modernization. WorldClaw also offers models from DeepSeek and Moonshot, firms administration officials have accused of stealing American intellectual property. All dispute the designations, with Alibaba calling its listing arbitrary and capricious and vowing to sue.

The Trump family owns 38% of World Liberty and earns revenue when WorldClaw customers pay with its USD1 stablecoin. Donald Trump Jr. and Eric Trump have both promoted WorldClaw on X. Family earnings from World Liberty tokens exceed $1.4 billion.

Researchers demonstrate ‘mind viruses’ that spread between AI agents

Researchers have demonstrated how “mind viruses” can spread like digital contagions through networks of artificial intelligence agents, passing from one system to another and even surviving after a model’s conversational context is erased.

In a preprint posted on August 10, Anthropic researcher Jack Lindsey and collaborators Vassilis Papadopoulos, McNair Shah and Sam Zimmerman describe what they call “mind viruses.” These are natural-language ideas or goals designed to persuade an AI agent to adopt them, record them and pass them to other agents.

The term does not refer to biological viruses or conventional malware. Instead, mind viruses are self-propagating instructions that spread through persuasion.

Oldest human brain cells grown in lab ‘recorded passage of time’

Peppercorn-sized clumps of human brain cells grown in a lab for a record seven years aged similarly to those inside our heads, suggesting they “recorded the passage of time,” scientists said Wednesday.

These tiny clumps called organoids are grown from stem cells by scientists around the world in the hopes of uncovering the mysteries of our brain — and to test new medicine without having to use animals such as mice.

Normally these organoids live for a few months, meaning they can only offer a window into the earliest stages of human brains, which take nearly 20 years to fully develop.

So a US-led team of researchers grew some for around seven years, making them the “oldest ever”, Paola Arlotta, the senior author of a new study describing the experiment, told AFP.

They discovered that the brain organoids continued to change and mature over the years, despite never having been inside an embryo, let alone a body.

“The brain can continue to develop outside the context of a person for this unprecedented amount of time,” explained Arlotta, a Harvard University professor.

UFO news coverage is increasing Gen Z Americans’ belief in aliens, poll finds

More Americans say recent reporting on UFOs has strengthened rather than weakened their belief in extraterrestrial life, with Gen Z and other younger adults showing the largest shift, according to a new national poll examining views on UFOs and aliens.

The online poll of 2,000 Americans, conducted by Talker Research from July 1 to July 6, found that 37% now believe in aliens more than before because of recent coverage of unidentified flying objects or UAPs. A majority, 54%, said the news had not changed their views, while 10% said it had made them less likely to believe.

US hiding bodies of four alien species, UFO whistleblower claims

A longtime UFO researcher has claimed that the United States possesses remains from at least four types of alleged non-human beings recovered from crashed unidentified craft.

Astrophysicist Eric Davis made the claims during an appearance on NewsNation's "Katie Pavlich Tonight." Davis said he had personally seen evidence connected to alleged UFO recoveries, including photographs and documentation involving unidentified craft and bodies.

"There are at least four species of which we are aware," Davis said, according to NewsNation, adding that he had witnessed what he considers proof.

However, Davis did not publicly provide photographs, biological samples or other physical evidence during the interview that could independently confirm his claims.
