Party of Assassins

The latest Trump assassin wasn't a radical. He was a Democrat.

There was nothing radical about Cole Tomas Allen: the attempted White House Correspondents' Dinner assassin. Allen's manifesto reads a lot like that of the previous three-named assassin Ryan Wesley Routh who was stalking President Trump at a golf game.

Apart from the explicit murder plots, there is nothing in Routh's 'Dear World' letter and Allen's manifesto that you wouldn't find in the Washington Post, a Jimmy Kimmel or Stephen Colbert monologue or a rant by a Democrat member of Congress. Routh was obsessed with Iran and Ukraine, sounding like Thomas Friedman when he complained that Trump had "ended relations with Iran like a child and now the Middle East has unraveled."

Allen offered even more generic foreign policy criticisms that seemed plucked from network newscasts and fake news coverage of Trump's campaign against illegal alien criminals, drug cartels, Islamic terrorists in Iran and the cutoff of funds to USAID, ranting about being ("raped in a detention camp", "fisherman executed without trial" "schoolkid blown up" or "a child starved").

Did Allen really care about events in Iran or Latin America? Could he even tell them apart?

There's a vagueness to the litany that suggests Allen had a weak grip on where these supposed things were even happening and what the connection to it was beyond justifying his attack.

Rather than Marxism, Routh and Allen offered tepid shopworn liberalism as their justification for murder, “U.S presidents must at bare minimum embody the moral fabric that is America and be kind, caring and selfless and always stand for humanity” and “the United States of America are ruled by the law, not by any one or several people. In so far as representatives and judges do not follow the law, no one is required to yield them anything so unlawfully ordered.”

This is the stuff of a Ken Burns op-ed and it shows that both men were more influenced by liberal Trump Derangement Syndrome media products than by Antifa or radical groups.

Allen slurs President Trump as a “pedophile, rapist and traitor”. This line is so commonplace in liberal circles that you can find it all across Bluesky, where the attempted assassin had an account, sold on t-shirts and popping up in op-eds. Social media personalities, talk show hosts and members of Congress have used similar rhetoric to refer to the 47th president.

There’s not much of a political critique. Just a grab bag of lines from MSNBC.

The truly revealing moment comes at the end of Routh’s manifesto. “I experience rage thinking about everything this administration has done.” That is a common enough symptom from liberals who doomscroll daily through social media rants about Trump until they get more blackpilled. Trump Derangement Syndrome isn’t a punch line. Much like any social media obsession, it is a social contagion that genuinely makes people dangerous and deranged.

Somali Stabs Jews in London, ‘Free Palestine’ Attacker Strikes in LA

PM Starmer booed after visiting stabbing site.

Meanwhile there was another attack near the Adas Torah synagogue, which had been previously attacked by a mob of Muslims and leftists in one of the more infamous incidents in Los Angeles.

“I feared for the end of my life,” the husband and father of three said in an exclusive interview with NBC Los Angeles. “My whole life flashed in front of me. I thought that this was it. This is how it’s going to end.”

He says he was walking home from a different synagogue, dressed in traditional Jewish clothing, when a man ran out of a car and assaulted him.

“All of a sudden, the doors roars open, and he jumps out of the car, and he jumps on me,” he said. “Puts his hands all over my neck. Pushes me to the right, pushes me to the left. The only thing I can remember was that I was yelling at the top of my lungs, ‘Help. Help.’”

“As I’m on the floor, vulnerable, and like in shock, he gives me a stare, a very dirty look stare, and says two words: ‘Free Palestine,’” he said.

Children in Turkey rip apart US flag and pictures of Donald Trump

It happened during a memorial for the Minab school bombarded during the first day of the Iran war.

A video of kids tearing down the Israeli and US flags, as well as Donald Trump's and Benjamin Netanyahu's portraits, has emerged online from an event held in Turkey. The children were filmed at a school event in Turkey. The ceremony showed a portrait of Iran's former leader, Ali Khamenei, and included a screen reading "Cruel US & Israel".

Turkish president's son promotes antisemitic agenda at a rally for late Hamas leader

In a deeply vitriolic and antisemitic outburst, Necmettin Bilal Erdogan, widely regarded as Turkey's de facto crown prince and groomed by his father, the president, to inherit the family's political dynasty, has declared that the Jews are a cursed race and that Israel and the United States are destined to be obliterated from the face of the earth.

In an interview during a rally he led on August 3 to protest the killing of Hamas leader Ismail Haniyeh, Bilal Erdogan described Israel as being driven by what he referred to as a "deviant ideology" and labeled Jews as a race condemned by God. He alleged that Jews see themselves as the world's masters and, as a result, believe they have the right to claim the lives and properties of others.

He also predicted that the conflict with Hamas in Gaza would lead to the downfall of both Israel and the United States, a view shared by antisemites worldwide.

Trump orders administration to prepare for long-term blockade of Iran – report

President Donald Trump has instructed his aides to prepare for an extended US naval blockade of Iran, The Wall Street Journal reported on Wednesday, signaling a shift toward sustained economic pressure as the war enters its third month.

The directive came during recent meetings with senior officials, during which Trump assessed that continuing the blockade was less risky than either escalating military action or moving quickly to end the conflict, according to officials familiar with the discussions.

The blockade, which targets Iranian ports and shipping through the Strait of Hormuz, has become the central pillar of US strategy following a ceasefire that halted large-scale bombing earlier this month.

Trump has maintained that the pressure campaign must continue until Iran agrees to strict limits on its nuclear program. He has insisted Tehran halt uranium enrichment for decades and accept long-term restrictions.

Google Clears Pentagon to Use AI Tools in Classified Settings

Tech company added language to contract to say its AI wasn't intended for domestic mass surveillance or autonomous weapons

Google has authorized the U.S. War Department to use its artificial-intelligence tools in classified environments.

The agreement accelerates the Pentagon's aggressive push to embed AI deeply into core military operations and decision-making systems.

It makes Google the third major AI company to reach such a deal in recent weeks, following OpenAI and Elon Musk's xAI.

The arrangement allows Google's AI to be deployed in all lawful scenarios. It was structured as an amendment to an existing contract and includes language stating the tools are not intended for domestic mass surveillance or autonomous weapons.

OpenAI secured similar provisions, although AI and legal experts question whether the clauses are legally binding.

The move stands in direct contrast to Anthropic, which refused the Pentagon's preferred terms and demanded explicit guardrails against those uses, triggering a monthslong feud with the Trump administration.

Wells Fargo Patent Describes 'Smart Dust' for Biometric Payment Verification

According to a detailed LinkedIn post by Joe Petroccelli – Muddiman, Wells Fargo has secured an active U.S. patent (US11354666B1) that envisions a futuristic layer of biometric security using microscopic sensors known as “smart dust.”

The patent describes microelectromechanical systems (MEMS) motes—tiny, dust-like particles equipped with sensors—that could be released into the air during transactions to verify a user's identity in real time.

This technology aims to create an invisible, multi-layered authentication shield for banking and payments, potentially transforming how identity is confirmed at point-of-sale terminals or through mobile apps.

The process unfolds rapidly upon payment initiation. A base station, which could be integrated into a POS terminal, smartphone, or nearby hub, activates and releases the motes near the user.

These sensors float or propel themselves into position, gathering intimate biometric and environmental data including heart rate, blood pressure, body temperature, breathing patterns, facial recognition, voice signatures, and motion profiles.

“These motes are stored in the base station or carried by the user (e.g., in a device). Upon activation, they are released into the air near the user,” the patent summary notes. Selected motes then transmit their readings, each carrying a unique ID that forms part of a dynamic “smart key.”

Convicted former Harvard scientist rebuilds brain computer lab in China

An American scientist convicted of lying to U.S. authorities about payments from China while he was at Harvard University has rebuilt his research lab in Shenzhen to pursue technology the Chinese government has identified as a national priority: embedding electronics into the human brain.

Charles Lieber, 67, is among the world’s leading researchers in brain-computer interfaces. The technology has shown promise in treating conditions such as ALS and restoring movement in paralyzed patients. But it also has potential military applications: Scientists at China's People's Liberation Army have investigated brain interfaces as a way to engineer super soldiers by boosting mental agility and situational awareness, according to the U.S. Defense Department.

Lieber was found guilty by a jury and convicted in December 2021 of making false statements to federal investigators about his ties to a Chinese state program to recruit overseas talent, and tax offenses related to payments he received from a Chinese university. He served two days in prison and six months under house arrest, and was fined $50,000 and ordered to pay $33,600 in restitution to the Internal Revenue Service. During the case, his defense said he was suffering from an incurable lymphoma, which was in remission, and he was fighting for his life. Three years after he was sentenced, Reuters has learned that Lieber is now overseeing China's state-funded i-BRAIN, or the Institute for Brain Research, Advanced Interfaces and Neurotechnologies, with access to dedicated nanofabrication equipment and primate research infrastructure unavailable to him at Harvard. The lab is an arm of the Shenzhen Medical Academy of Research and Translation, or SMART.

COVID Vaccine Hearing Exposes Deliberate Blind Eye to 'Overwhelming Evidence of Harm'

For four years, Senator Ron Johnson (R-WI) has wondered how US health officials could ignore "overwhelming evidence of harm" from the COVID vaccine.

"Now I know," he says.

The truth is, health officials didn't "ignore" safety signals. They buried them instead.

According to VAERS, the US's vaccine adverse event reporting system, more adverse events and deaths have been reported following COVID vaccines than from all other vaccines combined over the system's 30+ year history.

More dangerous than ivermectin. More dangerous than hydroxychloroquine (which turned out not to be so dangerous after all).

FDA fast-tracks psychedelic drug research following Trump executive order

The FDA announced a series of measures aimed at accelerating the development of psychedelic treatments for serious mental illness.

It's a significant step toward supporting psychedelic-based medicines for conditions such as treatment-resistant depression, PTSD and other substance use disorders, the agency said.

The FDA also said allowing these studies to proceed does not mean the drugs are approved or proven safe and effective and that data must be closely monitored.

Trump reclassifies state-licensed medical marijuana as a less-dangerous drug in a historic shift

President Donald Trump's acting attorney general on Thursday signed an order reclassifying state-licensed medical marijuana as a less-dangerous drug, a major policy shift long sought by advocates who said cannabis should never have been treated like heroin by the federal government.

The order signed by Todd Blanche does not legalize marijuana for medical or recreational use under federal law. But it does change the way it's regulated, shifting licensed medical marijuana from Schedule I — reserved for drugs without medical use and with high potential for abuse — to the less strictly regulated Schedule III. It also gives licensed medical marijuana operators a major tax break and eases some barriers to researching cannabis.

The Trump administration also said it was jump-starting the process for reclassifying marijuana more broadly, setting a hearing to begin in late June.

Bank Ordered to Garnish Benny Hinn Ministries' Account

Marketing firm latest among multiple vendors to sue televangelist.

For years, Benny Hinn Ministries has struggled to pay its debts. Now, another one of its creditors has taken legal action.

In March, Texas-based marketing firm PrintMPro served a San Antonio bank with a Writ of Garnishment to seize $159,615.85 in unpaid fees from the ministry, plus “interest and costs of suit.”

According to Trinity Foundation, the order followed a January ruling against the ministry, whose legal name is Benny Hinn's World Healing Center Church (WHCC), for failing to pay for services rendered. The ruling called on WHCC to pay “actual damages in the amount of $144,617.52 plus $64.93 per day from November 6, 2025, through date of this judgment,” and to pay PrintMailPro's legal fees.

Another creditor pursued WHCC in 2021, when a federal court ordered the ministry to pay more than $3 million to Mail America Communications. In that case, the plaintiff argued WHCC had fallen progressively behind in payments since 2006, resulting in more than $5.6 million in arrears by 2012. After WHCC allegedly failed to keep up with its payment obligations under two consecutive forbearance plans, Mail America Communications took the ministry to court.
