Anxiety Steals

Do not be anxious about anything, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanks-giving let your request be made known to God. (Philippians 4:6 ESV)

Today, the pressures of getting there (wherever there is) is the undergirding drive and influence that stimulates a posture of anxiety that steals the beauty of the now. What will best serve your spouse, children, and your own heart is the ability to strive toward God’s purpose while simultaneously embracing your current season of life. Don’t look ahead at the price of neglecting what the Lord has blessed you with now.

Whether you are in a season of diapers, car seats, and formula, or of teenage hormones, attitude, and drama, “make the best use of the time” (Ephesians 5:16 ESV) and disciple your family with a zeal for the Lord. Give thanks to the Lord for blessing you in your current season of life, and don’t waste these learning opportunities by looking ahead to a season of life that you haven’t reached yet.

Lord Jesus, forgive me for not trusting you. Posture my heart in a fashion of hope that grounds itself in who you are. Grant me a proper view of you. Amen.
